Vigorous Reply, Stating that Radical Changes in the Present System. Divesting Them of Power, Would Mean Extinction of Organization. After a prolonged session that teemed with hot debate and not a little bitterislative committee of the Chamber of Commerce, upon radical changes in the numane regulations of the District, ter ninated inconclusively last evening. The Horse Owners' Mutual Protective Association was arrayed in stalwart lines against the Humane Society, with plenty of heavy ammunition in the shape of elaborate arguments, affidavits, and eviness, the first hearing of the law and leg-dence accumulated for years. Under the leadership of its president C. A. Snow, the Humane Society representatives fought back vigorously, ever though outnumbered, and, apparently caught unprepared for the heavy fire o their opponents. They made a hard fight and did not flinch even when subjecte to severe cross-examination from th Horse Owners' Association and from the Chamber of Commerce committee was no attempt to conceal the facts.

Would Abolish Society. The new legislation proposed by the Horse Owners' Mutual Protective Association would "result in the extinction of the Humane Society," according to Cram-lihood that a more welcome greeting awaits the bill at this time. The horse owners are attempting to strengthen their position, however, by procuring support from various organizations, among them the Chamber of Com-merce. Both sides were given ample opportunity to be heard. Among the spokesmen for the Horse Owners' Mutual Protective Association were C. C. Mueller, A. S. Trundle, Dr. C. Barnwell Robinson, veterinary surgeo and dean of the United States College of Veterinarians; A. D. V. Burr, Thomas W. nith, Ross P. Andrews, and F. A. Se

"Do you support your agents from the fines turned over to you? Do you wax do your agents' salaries increase as their arrests and convictions increase?" was demanded of the Humane Society officers

President Snow silenced these interrogations by opening the books of the soclety and by promising to lay open all the reports of the treasurer before the Chamber of Commerce.
